California physician's license suspended for allegations of being unable to practice medicine safely

OLYMPIA -- The Medical Commission has immediately suspended the license of California physician Jaime C. David (MD00045956) on December 30, pending further proceedings. His license to practice medicine in Washington expired in July 2014, but is subject to renewal.

The California Medical Board entered an Interim Suspension Order against Dr. David's California license in August 2015 based on allegations that personal health issues render him unable to practice medicine safely. California will conduct a full hearing based on those allegations. The commission's action will protect the public in Washington pending completion of proceedings in California.
